

Chewing bread releases enzymes that break down complex carbohydrates into sugars, like maltose, which can taste sweet. So, the longer you chew, the more time for this process, leading to a sweeter taste.